Background and Recording

In the early 1970s, Led Zeppelin was at the height of their powers. The band had released a string of successful albums, including Led Zeppelin II (1969), Led Zeppelin III (1970), Led Zeppelin IV (1971), and Houses of the Holy (1973). However, the band was also struggling with personal and legal issues. In 1973, drummer John Bonham was arrested for drunk driving, and the band was forced to cancel a tour of the United States.

Despite these challenges, Led Zeppelin continued to work on new music. In 1974, the band entered Headley Grange, a remote farmhouse in Hampshire, England, to begin recording Physical Graffiti. The album was recorded in two sessions, with the first taking place in February and March and the second taking place in October and November.

The recording sessions were often chaotic and fueled by alcohol and drugs. However, the band was also able to capture some of their most inspired performances. Physical Graffiti features some of the band's most iconic songs, including "Kashmir," "The Rain Song," "Trampled Under Foot," and "In the Light."

Musical Style

Physical Graffiti also features several hard-rocking tracks, such as "Trampled Under Foot" and "In the Light." These songs demonstrate the band's incredible power and precision. The album closes with "The Wanton Song," a raucous rocker that is one of the band's most popular live songs.

Legacy

The album has sold over 15 million copies worldwide and has been certified 16x platinum by the RIAA. Physical Graffiti is considered one of the greatest rock albums of all time and has been ranked among the top 100 albums by Rolling Stone magazine.
