The group travels to Arizona, where they are met by Smiley Burnette, who is a stagecoach driver. Burnette takes the group to the ranch of June

Storey, who is a rancher. Storey welcomes the group to her ranch and offers them food and shelter.

The group begins to work on the ranch, and they quickly learn the ropes. They learn how to ride horses, rope cattle, and build fences. They also learn how to survive in the harsh conditions of the Southwest.

As the group works on the ranch, they begin to bond with each other. They learn about each other's backgrounds and they learn to appreciate each other's strengths and weaknesses. They also learn to work together as a team.

One day, the group is attacked by a group of outlaws. The outlaws are led by a man named Slade, who is a ruthless outlaw. Slade and his gang are trying to take over the ranch, but the group is able to defeat them.

After the attack, the group is hailed as heroes. They have proven themselves to be brave and resourceful, and they have shown that they are capable of settling the land. The group continues to work on the ranch, and they eventually become successful ranchers.
