Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance is divided into three parts. The first part, "The Phoenix," introduces Pirsig and his son, Chris. They are preparing for a motorcycle trip across the United States. Pirsig is also struggling with a personal crisis. He is questioning his beliefs and his place in the world.

The second part of the book, "Phaedrus," is a series of philosophical essays. Pirsig explores the nature of reality, the meaning of life, and the relationship between mind and body. He draws on a variety of sources, including Eastern philosophy, Western philosophy, and science.

The third part of the book, "Ananada," is a journal of Pirsig's motorcycle trip. He describes the places he visits and the people he meets. He also continues to explore the philosophical questions that have been raised in the earlier parts of the book.

The major themes of Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance include:

- The search for meaning: Pirsig is constantly searching for meaning in his life. He questions his beliefs, his relationships, and his place in the world.
- The relationship between mind and body: Pirsig believes that there is a close connection between mind and body. He argues that we cannot understand the one without the other.
- The importance of experience: Pirsig believes that experience is essential for learning and growth. He argues that we cannot learn about life from books alone. We must experience it firsthand.

- The value of community: Pirsig believes that we are all connected to each other. He argues that we need to build strong communities in order to thrive.
